CHAPTER I.

PEOPLE often wondered what nation the great financier, Francis Marlowe, originally sprang from. He was now a naturalized Englishman, and he looked English enough. He was slight and fair, and had an immaculately groomed appearance generally—which even the best of valets cannot always produce. He wore his clothes with that quiet, unconscious air which is particularly English. He had no perceptible accent—only a deliberate way of speaking. But Markeate!—such a name might have come from anywhere. No one knew anything about him, except that he was fabulously rich, and had descended upon London some ten years previously from Paris, or Berlin, or Vienna—and had immediately become a power in the city, and within a year or so had grown to be the unknown in certain circles.

He had a wonderfully appointed house in Park Lane, one of those smaller ones just at the turnout of Grosvenor street, and there he entertained in a reserved fashion.

It had been remarked by one or two people who had time to think—a rare case in these days—that he had never made a disadvantageous friend, from his very first arrival. If he had to use subordinates for business purposes, he used them only for that, in a cold, hard way, and never would have selected such men for a definite end. One of his favorite phrases was that "it was only the fool who sins for himself."

At this time, as he sat smoking a fine cigar in his library, which looked out on the park, he was perhaps forty-eight years old—fascinating, and yet, for his age, wise as serpents; he might have been ten years younger.

Opposite to him, facing the light, a young man lounged in a great leather chair. The curtains in Francis Markeate's library never closed the light, while he himself sat with his back to it.

There was no doubt about the visitor's nation. He was flamboyantly English. If you had wished to send a prize specimen of fine race to the World's Fair you could not have selected anything finer. He was Bombardment of Prevesa Begun After Turkish Torpedo Boats Are Sunk.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Italain forces have occupied the city of Bengazi, according to a report this afternoon. Bengazi is on the Gulf of Sidra, and has a population of 15,000, more than 1,000 of which are Europeans. The feeling there is said to be decidedly hostile to Christians.

PARIS, Sept. 30.—It is semi-officially reported that Turkey opened hostilities against Greece to-day by the invasion of Thessaly. Italy is reported to be mobilizing troops along the Austrian frontier. The spirit shown by Germany as indicated by the German press, together with Italy's reported action in sending troops to the Austrian line, is accepted here as foreshadowing the end of the Triple Alliance.

ROME, Sept. 30.—Battleships in the Adriatic division of the Italian navy began a bombardment of Prevesa, Turkey, early to-day, destroyed the government house, sank a Turkish torpedo boat and did great damage in that fortified Turkish stronghold.

This is the first actual invasion of Turkey by Italy.

TURKS RUSH AID TO BESIEGED CITY.

The Turkish government, according to reports that have been received here, is rushing help to the besieged city. It had been reported that the Italians had landed a force at Prevesa, but it is now believed that this information was premature.

It is expected that after the Italian warships reduce the fortifications that they will land and take charge of the city.

The only news that has reached here of reverses to the arms of Italy was the sinking of two barges when the Italians took Tripoli yesterday. No details of the capture of Tripoli have been received. So far as can be learned, there was no fighting at Tripoli to-day, but communications have been so hampered that it is difficult for any of the correspondents there to get any news through.

ITALIANS TO SWEEP MEDITERRANEAN

An entire flotilla of destroyers and torpedo boats was sent out to-day to protect the troops that are on their way to Tripoli. They will sweep the Mediterranean and frustrate any attempt that the Turks may make to intercept the soldiers.

Anti-war feeling in various sections of Italy manifested itself so strongly to-day as to cause apprehension in some quarters that a revolution might be the outcome of the war.

There was a report that an Italian cruiser had run ashore at Tripoli to-day. No details were received.

The Turkish transport Derna was seized by Italian warships in the Tripoli harbor yesterday immediately following the declaration of war, but not until after she had discharged her cargo of 13,000 rounds of rifle and 2,000 tons of ammunition.

It has been reported that Turkey to-day began hostilities against Greece by invading Thessaly. It was reported that Turkey would make this move in an attempt to arrest from Greece the control of crete. This is believed to be the ending of the Triple Alliance.

Fire on Italians.

Reports have reached here of the arrival of the Turkish transports off Prevesa. The transports carried 2,000 Turkish soldiers, who had started on their way to attack Tripoli. The Italians landed troops and began the invasion of Turkey by land.

The first engagement was reported from Tripoli by wireless. The Turks declined to surrender at first and fired on the Italians when they began to land from the battleships. It was reported that two barges were sunk.

The Duke of Abruzzi in a dispatch to Prevesa. It was while they were effecting this movement that they ran into two transports filled with Turkish soldiers.

The Italian cruiser began to attack the two boats at once. Soon the roar of the big guns echoed along the Turkish coast. The transports, realizing that they were likely to be sunk and all on board lost, turned and made for the shore.

In the meantime great holes had been shot in the sides of the Turkish vessels and they were filling with water. Too late to make any effective retaliation and they were greatly frightened.

Many of the Turkish soldiers leaped into the water and made an attempt to swim ashore. Many of the Turks were drowned.

The transports were finally driven on the rocks. Trapped and almost helpless, the Turks were an easy prey for the Italians. Shot after shot was poured into the wrecked ships. Many of the soldiers were shot to pieces. Others were taken prisoners. Others sank with the stricken vessels.

Turkish troops have been dispatched to Nicopolis, three miles from Prevesa, and it is reported that there will be a serious

Turks to Fight Hard.

It is now reported that Turkey will enter Italian aggression bitterly, and it is expected that one of the greatest engagements of modern times will be started before peace is secured.

Details of the fight off Prevesa began arriving here to-day. The Italians succeeded in the capture of four vessels. It is believed that there will be another and more serious battle on land, and even of it is equally serious.

It has now learned that the Turkish authorities at once took measures to send a big force of troops to Prevesa.

The invasion of European Turkey is regarded as fraught with consequences even more serious than the capture of Italy's colonies. Tripoli, to which it was asserted the war would be confined. Even Austria-Hungary, the theatre of whose activities appeared to be almost entirely confined to the Balkans, is apprehensive of the discovery.

Prevesa is a seaport of Turkey in the gulf of Arta and eighteen miles south west of Arta. It has a population of about 7,000 people.

It transpires to-day that coincident with the sinking of Tripoli Italians took what

BULLETINS

SALONIKI, Turkey, Sept. 30.—An Italian naval division to-day bombarded the seaport of Prevesa, destroying the government house and sinking a Turkish torpedo boat in the harbor.

ROME, Sept. 30.—A flotilla of destroyers and torpedo boats, independent of the five recognized naval divisions, has been instructed to sweep the sea between Italy and Tripoli and the eastern Mediterranean to prevent attacks on the file of transports now on the way to Tripoli.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—A large Italian cruiser went ashore to-day at Tripoli, according to unconfirmed advices received here.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—All rumors of mediation by the United States in the Tripolitan war were settled to-day at the State Department by semi-official announcement that this government will not offer its good offices to end the war.

CARDIFF, Wales, Sept. 30.—Italy, at premium rates, has contracted for thousands of tons of coal from Welsh colliery companies, and has engaged steamers upon which to ship the fuel to Italian naval bases at once. France is also negotiating for a quarter of a million tons of Welsh coal, the contracts calling for quick shipments.

battle within a short time. The Turks will make a desperate effort to drive the Italians from Derna.

Just what the situation was in the vicinity of the certain Arabian tribes, which soldiers is not absolutely known. No one knows definitely whether they are actually engaged with the Turks or not. It is known from that fact that practically none of them in the first two days were placed with whom they had been fighting, but were killed.

The Italians are by far stronger forces to be employed by any nation in northern Europe. Although recruited largely from Turkish subjects, they are Italians. Europe stated that any attempt to employ these troops in the northern countries would result in the immediate withdrawal of the Italian Ambassador, the recall of the Italian Consuls and the severance of diplomatic relations. It is understood that the Italian Government has given assurances to the Turkish government that the troops will not be employed in the north.

Turkey Fights Dismemberment.

Turkey is preparing to fight to the last. All the factions of the empire, which have been estranged in the public and private affairs of the nation, to the great powers are uniting.

They declare they will fight to the bitter end and will die exterminated rather than see their country cut up and parceled out by the European powers. Even if they should be driven into the sea, they declare, before the Italian empire is closed will be ready and Europe will be asked to pay a terrible price.

Of all the countries which enter into the war, aside from the territorial aspect, the Mohammedan figures in the most important. Turkish authorities are appealing to the religion of their subjects.

Governor-generals throughout the various villayets are issuing proclamations charging that the war over Tripoli is to realize a crusade in the spirit of the Mohammedan.

Salonika has temporarily become the seat of activity of the Young Turks.

Thirty-five and Talaat Beys are at Salonika, and the seat of government has practically been moved into European Turkey.

It is pointed out that the strategic position of Salonika is far superior to that of Constantinople because of the geographical conditions of Constantinople enable it to be easily cut off by Italian warships in the Mediterranean.

Proclamations have been issued expelling all Italian residents of Turkey. Little effort is being made to protect their lives. Many of them will be murdered in the hatred which the Mohammedans bear the Christians.

Italian officers stationed in the various consular districts, merchants, fishermen and other subjects of Italy have either fled precipitately even up to Wednesday or Thursday, or are clandestinely closing up their affairs and preparing to take the first means of flight.

Demonstrations in Salonika.

News that Italian warships had given battle to a Turkish fleet and had sunk two transports and heavy loss of life terminated the Turkish residents of Salonika to-day.

Demonstrations were made in the streets and the lives of foreigners were threatened. Foreign interests have called upon the Turkish authorities to preserve order at all costs. Military law will be declared there to-day as was done in Constantinople yesterday.

Advices from Constantinople say that Mahmoud Shefket Pasha, Turkish Minister of War, and a number of other ministers, including Noradounghian Effendi, Minister, Nadji Khalil today to map out a definite plan of campaign against the Italian encroachment on Turkish territory.

It is said that the Turkish forces in Albania. If this is carried out it will result in the concentration of the Turkish troops in the Balkans, and diplomatic circles will measure the peace of all Europe will remain.

Turkey, while insisting that her rights in Tripoli are for the future are in no way impaired, is willing to treat with Italy, although its claim for the future are in the meantime, and has instructed the Turkish ministers in pending the treaty to look after the interests of Italy. Word to all the foreign diplomats in Constantinople is issued a statement at the Yildiz Kiosk, which Turkey will again present her case before the powers, and that she will not, for intervention, she discussed at length.

Turkey Appeals to Powers.

Every influence at the command of the Ottoman government is being brought to bear. Turkish agents are in every capital of Europe to present her case against Italy in the minority, and appeal to the justice of the powers to intervene. It is believed that she feels that she will have presented her case to the world and that she will have done many months she may to preserve her national integrity.

The best Turkish military strategy in Europe, officers trained in the German military schools, are now in command of the Turkish forces. It has been in power twenty-four hours, it was making its influence felt on the situation.

The government has commandeered all telegraph wires for the sending of military dispatches and a censorship has been established over dispatches to foreign newspapers.

Appeals are being made to the younger and more vigorous Mohammedan populations of Turkish dominion to fight under the Turkish colors. Turkey has only one million of all ages against the powerful host of 12,000,000 men, of which Italy can muster. Whereas Turkey has only one navy of any consequence, Italy has many modern battleships.

Turkey can theoretically muster 2 million soldiers against Italy's 1,000,000, but only one hundredth of these troops could be transported owing to the lack of means of transportation in the Ottoman Empire.

ROME, Sept. 30.—The Italian flag today flies over Tripoli, an Italian army has invaded European Turkey and the Italian navy has won the first battle of the Turko-Italian war.

This is the sum of the first twenty-four hours of the hostilities between the two powers. Reports from Salonika indicated that another naval battle is imminent in the Adriatic Sea.

Hundreds of Turkish soldiers are reported to have lost their lives in the shelling of the Turkish transports by Italian warships at Sousseau and Preveza, two thirty miles distant from each other on the Turkish coast in Albania, Southern Albania.

Advices from Italian headquarters state that a number of soldiers were on board two transports when they were fired upon. They were ordered into Southern Albania to wreck Preveza in retaliation for the bombardment of the Italians.

Although the Italian fleet has established a blockade over Prevesa, the transports will attempt to run the line at night landing forces at Mesopilus.

Military law has been established in Tripoli and Preveza. Italy is taking the aggressive also and holds all the advantage so far. The Italian government has decided upon a policy of "Hands off."

In addition to the port blockades of the Italian warships a line is being established across the Adriatic, Ionian and Aegean seas and at the mouth of the Dardanelles in an attempt to bottle up the Turkish war fleet in the Black Sea.

Orders have been sent by wireless for the Duke of Abruzzi to establish a base about Kum Kalen at the extreme western end of the Dardanelles.

Troops are running more troops in Tripoli, where the fanatical Mohammedan tribes here are rising en bloc a bold army against the Christians. General Ragava, commander-in-chief of the Italian expeditionary forces in Tripoli, has been ordered to give battle to the Bedouins at once regardless of if they attempt to invest the city.

An Italian cruiser has been dispatched to intercept the Turkish transport bearing Mukhtar Bey, the new governor-general of Tripoli. He will either be turned back toward Constantinople or will be taken prisoner. It is announced that the Italian government will officially take over Tripoli on October 7.

Rome Wild with War Fever.

The Duke of Abruzzi will probably be made the first military Governor of the province.

Rome is in a state of turmoil. The enthusiasm of the people over the new victory broke all bounds. But few Romans slept last night and to-day the excitement ascended into frenzy. The war spirit is spreading here, the country like wild fire.

Young boys are clamoring to enlist. From the authorities locally the government has had to refuse the subscription to every day the applications of pictures of King Victor Emmanuel have been displayed everywhere. In the foreign consular district and the quarter adjoining the Italian Chamber and the quarters of the Italian Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the scenes are indescribable. Thousands of persons are massed there, cheering and singing patriotic songs.

the Cabinet. It was decided to occupy Tripoli without delay.

The Minister of Marine ordered the warships to begin hostilities. The battleship Napoli at the last report was two miles from Tripoli.

The Pope has ordered fervent prayers for the fleet.

The Turkish Charge d'Affaires received his passports at the frontier and started for home this evening.

The warships now battling Tripoli are the Pisa, Amalfi, Sardegna, Napoli and Varese. In addition there are six destroyers.

Protection of Foreigners.

MILAN, Sept. 30 (by post to the frontier).—The Italian fleet has been ordered to bombard the city of Tripoli in order to prevent the landing of Turkish reinforcements. The admiral in command has been instructed to distribute his ships along the Albanian, Macedonian and Syrian coasts the moment action begins.

The order seeks to prevent any attempt against the Italian government even by privateering, which would be easy from Albania, as it is only a few hours distant from the Italian port of Apulia on the Adriatic, which is quite undefended of forts or fortifications.

These ships will also protect Italians and foreigners alike in outlying territory. The foreigners now in Tripolitania have left, when the order to bombard Tripoli is issued, certain that few Italians left and any foreigners who may wish to leave. These, it is believed, number about 100.

BOSTON ITALIANS SAIL ON CANOPIC TO FIGHT TURKS

One hundred and fifty young Italians who have served in the army or navy of the fatherland sailed for home from Boston this afternoon on the White Star liner Canopic to fight the Turks. Another band will follow them later.

There was nothing but war talked about in the North End today, and the Italian population was in a frenzy of excitement. Even old men who are beyond the conscription age are going back to Italy. There will be about 1,000 Italians on the Canopic when she leaves Boston, including men, women and children.

All the North End banks are selling letters and issuing drafts on demand. It is estimated that at least $200,000 has been withdrawn from the Lawrence, Hanover, Peoria, Atlanta and Beradini banks within the few days by Italians who are returning to their old home to join the army or navy, or to help fight.

ITALY NOW FACES A REVOLUTION AT HOME AFTER BATTLE

MILAN, via Frontier, Sept. 30.—Italy faces a revolution at home as the result of her conquest of Tripoli. Socialists, already in the hands of the authorities in many centres and anti-military riots are increasing in intensity. The threat of general law throughout Italy made by the Socialists to curb the Royalist plans appears to their error. They declare that every Italian soldier embarked for Africa will carry out their conquest of the military party, and that unless the Italian people defend the government may be overthrown.

The censorship on the news coming from both Italian and Turkish sources rendered information of late developments very meagre. Confirmation of the Italian landing on the Tripoli coast is lacking and it is doubted here if one has yet been effected.

MELTZER EXPLAINS THE REAL REASONS FOR WAR

CHARLES HENRY MELTZER.

Charles Henry Meltzer, the well-known correspondent and critic of the New York AMERICAN, who just returned from Scutari, the headquarters of the Turkish forces sent to reprove the Albanian insurrection, where he stayed some time, says that "the rights of Italy in Africa are doubtful."

Mr. Meltzer gives a graphic account of happenings in the country with which Italy is now embroiled in war, and says the Italian government had all along been secretly in sympathy with the insurgents.

"Commencing further he calls attention to the many brutalities which have marked the dominion of the Turks in Europe, saying their progress has been blood-stained, fire, rape and murder. The points out that Europe and America have too often looked on with indifference at the atrocities committed by the Turks. He says that if Italy enforces her rights in Africa it will hasten the expulsion of the Ottomans from the Southern and Western territories and thereby earn the gratitude of humanity.

By CHARLES HENRY MELTZER.

The outbreak of hostilities at Tripoli is in my judgement the beginning of the end. The Turks have had repeated warnings. For four or five centuries they have outraged justice, mercy and humanity. The latest of their outrages concerned Albania, or rather that forlorn part of the country which is inhabited by the Albanian highlanders or Malissori.

Turks, as in many other places, the Turks proved that they were ruthless, inhuman and incapable of profiting by history. The Young Turks, who were directly responsible for the Albanian rising which marked the recent campaign against the hereditary oppressors, had heralded the words, "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity" upon their coinage only to ignore all that the words meant in their acts.

Italy had all along been secretly in sympathy with the insurgents. So had Montenegro, which through the marriage of a daughter of King Nicholas to Victor Emanuel the Second, has been closely in touch with the Italians and their court.

To the amazement and distress of the unhappy Mallocori, Europe at large had America failed to take any interest in their miseries. At the dictation of the Turks Montenegro withdrew the assistance she had promised to the Albanians and the insurgents were compelled, by the strength of lying promises made by the Turkish envoys, to submit to their oppressors and return to the bare walls which represented what the Turks had left of their household homes.

Real Reason for War.

While I was in Montenegro and Albania recently I met many political Italian agents travelling in those countries in the disguise of newspaper correspondents. Their sympathies were clearly anti-Turkish, which is perhaps confirmed in saying they also were anti-German and anti-Austrian.

There is an indirect connection between the attack on Tripoli and the atrocious outrages for which the Turkish forces were responsible in the Albanian hills. The direct reasons for the present trouble can, however, be traced back to the seizure by the Bank of the occupation of Egypt by the British, which in turn led to the powerful very quickly by the French occupation of Tunis.

The Italians, who like the French, Spaniards and Greeks, are a Mediterranean power, resented their exclusion from African territory. Tripoli has always been a sore point with them and for many years there has been an impulse if not openly expressed, understanding that sooner or late they would find opportunity for an outlet for their would-be colonists in Tripoli.

Till lately the Turks had been too strong and too cautious to give them the pretext for the declaration of hostilities which they desired. But, in the last few months, the Young Turks, who have lost their heads and who seem to have adopted as their motto not only "Liberty, Equality and Fraternity"—as de-ined also "After Us the Deluge," have thrown away prudence and, counting perhaps too absolutely upon support from Germany, have taken to insulting Italian officials and Italian citizens in Tripoli.

The Moroccan imbroglio is also and more nearly responsible for what is now happening in Tripoli. Germany has sown the wind. The Turks are reaping the whirlwind. Fearing that in the scramble for African territory they might be whistled left, the Italians have made haste to assert their rights in Africa before the whole of Northern Africa. It seems to me, up to Germany to smother their friends, the Ottomans, at the sincerity of their sympathy. If, as is probable, Germany refrains from taking a direct hand in the coming complications, that is to say, if she does not diplomatically lay by force, interpose to assist the Turks, the chances are that she will lose all the influence and prestige which for the past twenty years or more she has been sedulously acquiring in Constantinople.

In no capital in Europe will not seem to the present conflict. Civilization, outraged by Italy's action, will be found decisively as there is very little doubt that the Italians have at least the moral support of France and England. The Italian government could not have ventured on so bold a step as it has taken had it not felt confident that it could not be interfered with seriously by the great western Powers.

Both France and England—possibly also Russia, Austria and Germany—may endeavor to make something out of Turkey when the final smash begins. From conversations which I had with prominent Turks at Scutari, I gathered that the Turks were pretty conscious of the perilous position to which their resistance to progress had exposed them. One very intelligent Ottoman, when discussing the situation with me, said:

"We feel that Europe is against us. We may have to fight, but we will die hard."

And, as the Turks are known to be good fighters, they may give the Italians a good run for their money.

In the settlement of the issue Italy will have to count not only on the hostility of the Turks in Tripoli, but also on the enmity of the great Arab tribes in Northern Africa, who get their arms from the strongholds of the Senussi in the interior. It is quite possible that a pan-Islamic religious war will be precipitated. And this may mean mischief not only to the Italians but also to the French in Tunis, Algeria and Morocco and to the English in Egypt.

Slicing Up Turkey.

The end may be delayed for months or years. Not until next Spring may be the situation be thoroughly developed. Then, however, in the opinion of most people who have watched the recent course of events and are aware how vague and elusive are the pretences of the Young Turks to the respect of civilization, we may look forward to a more or less organized series of incidents which will include Greece, Bulgaria, Albania and perhaps Russia, through their agents, the Mussulmans, into conflict with the unveiled Sublime Porte.

In the scramble which may result it will be strange, indeed, if part of Arabia should not pass under the dominion of England. Russia may increase its hold on Armenia, Germany will try, no doubt, to strengthen its position in the Baghdad territory and on the Persian border and Greece will demand Crete.

The final expulsion of the Ottomans from Europe has been so often prophesied that it is foolish to predict exactly when it will occur, but we are now, I think, within measurable distance of that event. It is no longer far event.

Personally I had opportunities of seeing the Turkish forces in the field and of following the Turkish staff at close quarters, and who was then Enesal Pasha. The commander himself impressed me as an intelligent and able man. His soldiery, most of them were Kurds and Anatolians from the coast, were only one degree better than zeibuns. They had the appearance of being of a fortier look, and even the movements of apes. By contrast with their irregular, simple antagonists, the Albanian Skipetars, they seemed brutes.

I have letters in possession from Miss Mary Edith Durham, the English woman who has made for herself a reputation as the good angel of Albania, which show how little dependence can be placed upon any promise which the Turks have made to the Albanian insurgents. Miss Durham writes to me from Scutari, as follows:

"Things here are desperately bad. The wretched Albanian refugees are, as you know, forced back to what is left of their own old homes. The Turkish government has not kept its word. The money for rebuilding the ruined cottages of the mountaineers has not been given to them, and the poor wretches are hutless and in a most pitiable state. Two thousand pounds at least require reading if the population are not to die of cold this Winter. The people of Malzie, which the Turks promised to give, is already running short. At least 10,000 pounds is needed urgently to save the victims of the outrages, and we are short of funds.

"The only one of many instances which have marked the insolence of the Turks in Europe. Wherever they have gone their progress has been feared with fire, rape and murder. Not Europe, and in the case of Albania, not America, has looked on too often with indifference, giving the Turks control for the use which they possessed, which is outrage and is leaving the miserable victims of which they have been guilty.

"The rights of Italy in Africa are doubtful. Yet, if by enforcing them the Italians hasten on the expulsion of the Ottomans from harrassing from the Southern and Western territories which they have conquered, they will deserve the gratitude of all humanity.

To Properly Treat Obstinate Wrinkles

"Particularly where wrinkles and furrows are long and deep, the usual massage devotee is apt to rub too hard and too frequently," says Dr. Linoline. "Such treatment irritates the skin, causes muscles to sag and aggravates the wrinkled condition. Just the opposite result from what she seeks.

"Better than massage, or anything else for the most obstinate wrinkles is the regular use of Linoline. This simple, delightful, harmless preparation, known in France, where American ladies may thank Trilby's creator for the use of it, will have no difficulty procuring in confidents from your druggists. It is thin, the color of pearl, and smells in one-half pint with hazel. Bathe the face, neck and hands in the bath. The effect is really marvellous, not only as to wrinkles, but also in spots of double chin and baggy cheeks. The application of cooling, soothing, tonifying to relieve fatigue and insomnia."

Marvel for Any Superfluous Hair

Wonderful Action of Elec-tro-la, the New Hair-Remover, Will Surprise You

Nearly every man or woman who has been troubled with superfluous or unsightly hairs has had experience with various preparations which merely burn off the surface hair, redden the skin, and fail to kill the hair roots.

Elec-tro-la is the remarkable new hair remover which does more than merely kill the surface hair. It goes to the hair roots, destroys them absolutely and forever.

Whether the superfluous hair is of light or heavy growth, Elec-tro-la will destroy it immediately and permanently.

Even light fuzz makes a woman look coarse. Heavy growth is humiliating, and is Cupid's worst enemy.

ALL READY FOR FETE IN BASIN

The New England public in general and motor boat enthusiasts in particular, will find in the Sunday AMERICAN to-morrow full details up to date of the great motor boat parade and illuminated water carnival which the AMERICAN has announced for the evening of Thursday, October 12, Columbus Day, in the Charles River Basin.

Plans for this tremendous water fete are going ahead splendidly. Many entries have been received. Any motor boat owner in New England is eligible. In fact, one of the prizes will be for the boat coming the longest distance to the carnival water.

If you own a motor boat and wish to enter the carnival, send your name to the AMERICAN'S Carnival Editor, No. 82 Summer street, Boston. He will mail you an entry blank, to be filled out and returned to him. The carnival date is less than a fortnight away, so it is well for all who wish to enter to make themselves known to the Carnival Editor without delay.

Room for the Spectators.

Every convenience of entrants and spectators at this big carnival will be considered. Spectators will find unexcelled view points from the broad esplanades which line the basin and from the mighty bridges which span the water.

Nor will the view of spectators on esplanades and bridges be cut off by the fleet of yachts, launches and canoes which will assemble in the basin to view the motor boat parade. These vessels, not in the parade, must keep to the middle of the basin, allowing the parade line to pass on either side. The procession will pass within twenty feet of the esplanade walks, so that the view from the esplanades will be superb.

The route of the carnival parade will be as follows:

Form on the river between Cottage Farm and Harvard Bridge at an exact spot which is to be announced later. The parade route will be downstream close to the Boston wall, passing under the Harvard Bridge, along the Boston wall and turning slightly off the Union Boat Club so as to follow along the Charles street embankment. Continuing under the West Boston Bridge along the Charlesbank to the dam.

Will Turn Upstream.

Turning to the left and following the dam the parade will cross to the Cambridgeport side, turning thence upstream to the West Boston Bridge, under that bridge, along the Cambridge shore, under the Harvard Bridge and disband.

The Metropolitan Park Commission, which has charge of the basin, high State and city officials and other prominent people are keenly interested in the holiday carnival, whose success is now assured.

A photographic reproduction, greatly reduced in size, of the colored art cover of the new magazine given free with every copy of to-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

TO-MORROW the "big battalions" of Sunday AMERICAN readers, from Boston to Biddeford and across the State to the New York line, will be given a treat that will be a red-letter event in the annals of Boston newspaperdom.

Each reader of the Sunday AMERICAN, when he buys his paper, will find with it, as an added feature, a complete magazine, which will take him a week to enjoy.

The AMERICAN is proud of its ability to present this magazine to its legion of Sunday readers.

And popular opinion will endorse that pride Sunday morning in every home of this city and throughout the Commonwealth.

Art and fiction, philosophic writing, delightful miscellany and superb illustration are the features of the AMERICAN'S Sunday Magazine.

It will be a welcome visitor in every household.

So great will be the public quest for this fair debutante of Boston's fourth estate that no newsdealer can afford to say "all gone" too early in the day.

On the other hand the people themselves must do their share, and, early in the day, procure a copy, for there is a limit, even to the Sunday AMERICAN'S productive powers, enormous as they have grown to be.

The last six years have seen many progressive steps taken in the newspaper enterprise of Boston. Strange though it may appear to some, the wellspring of progress has been found to be beneath the AMERICAN office on Summer street.

New ideas, steadily leaping along the highway of enterprise and progress, are stamped upon the history of this newspaper.

The AMERICAN'S Sunday Magazine, bright, breezy, educative and entertaining, as its every page will be, marks a forward step, longer and more decisive than any taken since the huge presses of the AMERICAN first began to whirl.

DEMAND NEW LAW AGAINST THE EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN BAY STATE FOUNDRIES

Protest Will Be Voiced at Big Faneuil Hall Mass Meeting.

At 8 o'clock tonight Faneuil Hall will be the scene of a mighty gathering in the cause of humanity, one of those assemblies of the people for which this historic auditorium is famous. The gathering will be the indignation meeting called to protest against the employment of women and girls in Massachusetts foundries under conditions which have been denounced by all interested in social and industrial betterment.

These conditions were exposed in the AMERICAN last Sunday in a double page article of fully revealing the employment of women core-makers in the foundry department of the Blake-Knowles Pump Works in East Cambridge, where the young witnesses, fully illustrated, came as a shock to the New England public. A part of protest has been based upon these findings up to tonight's meeting.

The doors of Faneuil Hall will be open at 7:30. The meeting will be free of admission. The galleries will be reserved for women who are particularly invited to attend and to lend the influence of their presence to the humane movement.

Prof. Berle to Preside.

The meeting will be called to order at 8 o'clock by Professor A. A. Berle of Harvard College, Professor Berle, before he enters the service of the city, was instrumental in bringing the most prominent citizens of Boston into the movement.

In the parleys with Professor Berle were a distinguished array of speakers, as well as other people who, though they do not speak, will show their enthusiasm for the meeting by taking platform seats.

Among the speakers will be Benjamin Tolle, F. Sherman of Holyoke, leader of Holyoke Moulders' Union; William Jean, organizer of the Moulders' Union of North America; Mrs. Mary E. Condon, union vice president of the National Women's Trade Union League; Miss Maud Gilman, secretary of the Breakfast Food Union; President William H. Gribbs of the Boston Central Labor Union; Bill Mitchell, secretary of Arthur Chaffin, secretary Harry Ainsmann of the Boston Central Labor Union Congressman John M. Corbett, and others.

Is Bodfish Aids Cause.

Much interest in the speech of Representative Sheehan at Horticultural Hall, when he will give the details of the conditions in foundries. It was Mr. Sheehan who in his capacity as delegate to the annual convention of the Massachusetts State branch A. F. of L. at Haverhill declared the foundry situation.

To-day Joshua P. L. Bodfish of Jamaica Plain, announced today that he is heart in sympathy with the present movement and will be glad to sit on the platform at tonight's meeting.

The AMERICAN received the following letter today:

Boston, Sept. 28, 1911.

Boston AMERICAN:

At a meeting of the Chelsea Central Labor Union the following resolution was adopted:

Whereas, The immoral conditions which have been discovered in the foundries of Greater Boston, where women are employed are a disgrace to humanity, a reflection upon and exercise a degrading influence upon womankind of the commonwealth;

We, the delegates to the Chelsea Central Labor Union, assembled in regular session, protest against the employment of women and girls in the foundries of the Commonwealth as an American.

Therefore, be it resolved, that we go on record as in favor of and indorsing the action of the Massachusetts state Branch, A. F. of L., in demanding the creation of a Department of Labor for enforcement of all labor laws.

G. J. NEWMAN,
President.

Mrs. Charles Mills Cabot, the Back Bay society woman, who did picket duty during the recent strike of garment makers, and many others are protesting the employment of women. She will attend this meeting. She denounced the inhumane conditions of the employment of women core-makers at the Blake-Knowles foundry in a remarkable interview today. She said:

Sacrificing Mothers.

Women are literally bathed in hot sand the blistering heat of an iron foundry. Such work must of necessity incapacitate them for motherhood, if it is permitted to continue. National self-preservation and our desire to perpetuate the race make the employment of girls in core-making the practice more than a moral issue.

It now becomes a question of national life or national death if the future generations of the race are to be sacrificed upon the altar of a degrading industrialism, the nation itself must soon cease to exist.

The same cause that has emasculated the woman of Poland, and produced the woman-idiot of Russia, is now responsible for the existence of the woman core maker in our Republic. A political democracy, in theory, we are confronted by an industrial despotism as complete and as far-reaching as anything obtaining in any European country today. Poland and Russia not excepted.

While convinced that absolute justice can never be obtained for women wage workers until they are given the right to vote, and are solidly organized economically, as trade unionists, I maintain that every man, and every woman with the good of the community at heart, should join in this protest against the exploitation of helpless womanhood.

Dr. Anna H. Davis-Parker, president of the Massachusetts Municipal Club, who is well known as a student of social questions, has visited many foundries in this country and Canada, where she found women working as moulders. During her time of observation she was at St. Johnsbury, Vermont, in the Fairbanks Scale Company. How the women do moulding, and do it in districts where they are entirely excluded from the gaze of the men. She has also visited foundries at Sherbrook, Canada, where she found women working at the same trade. When she viewed the conditions under which women

"Not a Proper Trade for Women."

In this great and glorious country we should not allow the conditions under which women work as moulders to be tolerated.

I have seen women working as moulders under what might be called improved conditions, working by themselves, I mean, and properly dressed for that kind of work.

But even with all the improvements made, this is not the proper trade for women. Were women were slaves, men might carry out this idea. But women today are not slaves, and the right sort of thinking men know that they are not slaves. They have a mission and a duty in life and are able to fulfill them.

It is peculiarly a man's work to be a moulder. Man is so constructed that he should be able to do that work better than a woman. I do not say but a woman can do it as well as a man, and in doing so the works shows greater disintegration into a man. She is not physically suited for such work any more than some men are. I have no doubt that some women are strong enough to do the hardest kind of work. But we have a better idea of womankind in America than they have in other countries.

Do you suppose that the owners of that foundry over in East Cambridge think that women should be employed because they can do the work better than men? Not at all. They are employing women over there because they can get them cheaper than men moulders, and they were on the verge of turning out more men, I understand, until this demonstration was made and giving their places to women.

"Pure Selfishness."

It is pure selfishness that has put women as moulders in that foundry.

Every one knows this, who is at all familiar with women working in foundries. If they gave the women as much as they give the men, part of the life of this evil could be saved. But not some how. Somehow the boss will make you work harder than he do himself.

Don't you think that some of these girls who are working in the Blake-Knowles Foundry are saving something like this?

Have we nothing better for these women, who have been overburdened in their own country but a moulder's job?

Women of Massachusetts! Let us rise against this. We must not be able to get the franchise for our own sex, but we can protect women doing the same work as the men and getting such small pay.

"They say that they are satisfied with their pay. Well, let us educate them to be true Americans, and they will not be contented to be moulders in a dirt foundry.

"Let us teach these women household duties, and let them live out as servants, put on a clean shirtwaist on their day off, and not let them go around six days in the week, clad with a wrapper as black as the face of spades.

"Nothing will justify these women working at such a foundry. This is not the 15th century. It is the 20th, and women will take their places in other vocations rather than merely doing work to make men happy, in saving expenses to put forth larger dividends.

Among the prominent clergymen who will be present to offer protest against women slavery will be the Rev. James A. Francis, D. D., pastor of the Clarendon Street Baptist Church.

Big Body of Union Workers.

The Board of Governors of the Building Trades Department of the Boston Central Labor Union at a special meeting, called to attend the Faneuil Hall meeting in a body, a set of resolutions condemning the employment of women in foundries, and indorsing the Massachusetts State police and demanding that candidates for State office give pledges themselves to work for a law forbidding such employment was unanimously adopted. Arthur M. Huddell, business agent of the Building Trades Department, will present the resolution at the meeting.

Waltham Local No. 102 of the Iron Moulders' Union of North America, has indorsed the AMERICAN'S work in its campaign against woman slavery.

Fleshy People Suffer from Skin Troubles

Fleshy people are often affected by itching and irritation of the skin caused by perspiration and chafing, which frequently develops into eczema or other skin troubles, and if neglected may become chronic. It matters not how long you have suffered, or what kind of skin trouble you have, the new remedy Cadum should be given a trial. Dakotas' Choicest Wheat Goes Into Yours truly MACARONI

And that's what makes Yours truly Macaroni or Spaghetti the most delicious dish that was ever set before you—that fine Durum wheat from the rich farm lands of the Dakotas.

These little flinty kernels are meaty and rich in nutriment. They give the firm, flavory tubes a rich delicacy of taste that none but the finest of Italian macaronis can rival. And better yet, they make Yours truly nearly twice as nutritious a food as any other macaroni, for this fine Durum wheat is especially rich in gluten—the best of muscle-making foods.

And then, to make Yours truly even better, the delicious tubes are dried in a wonderful way by washed air that makes them so porous, so light, so pure, that they always cook tender and flavory and easily digestible.

Ask your grocer for a package of Yours truly. Serve it just once, and see how quickly the whole family says: "More."

And don't forget to order some of the other Yours truly good things. You'll like every one on the list.

ANCIENTS' BOAT IN COLLISION

By RICHARD W. SEARS
Boston American Staff Photographer and member of the Ancients, with Ancients on Bermuda trip.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—The ferryboat Baltimore, transporting the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company of Boston from the Fall River Line pier into Manhattan, crashed into the Jersey ferry slip on the port side about five minutes ago, battered in the starboard side of the Fall River.

The Ancients' band, which was making "Yale Blue" ring from the rafters, kept on playing. The musicians never lost a note.

Officers of the Baltimore made a hasty examination. Finding that no water was coming in they ordered the Baltimore full speed ahead. The rest of the trip to the dock was made without incident.

The collision attracted attention up and down the waterfront. Several boats churned the water in a race for the Battery, but Baltimore docks had needed no repairs.

RETIRED OFFICER DIES ABOARD BOAT

NEWPORT, Sept. 30.—Gustave Cope, 67, a retired naval paymaster, a member of the United States navy, was found dead aboard his sloop, the Wanita. He was one of the best known sailing men about Newport, and was formerly attached to the naval torpedo station here. He married and made his home much of the time aboard his boat.

Consumed quart of Whisky every 24 hours.

VICTORY IN 3 DAYS

If you know anyone who drinks alcohol to excess, write Dr. J. E. Haines, 1 Haines Building, Cincinnati, O., and he will send a FREE trial treatment of his remedy. Say:

I drank beer at first, then gradually de-veloped into a whisky drinker. I was a victim of the habit when a mere youth, and as years passed by my appetite for drink grew stronger. Often some friend would say:

"Have a drink with me," and I would not refuse. Then I would treat the crowd. This damaged business, health and social standing. I was a slave to the habit. I tried to break away from the saloonkeepers, who constantly tempted me, but failed.

For 15 years I kept it up, and I can truthfully say that I spent a fortune for drink. Then I took a joyous mes-

Wives, Mothers, Sisters

While drifting from bad to worse, I found a true remedy. My health was restored, my desire for drink removed, and my appetite and normality set at doing for drink. I am now a sober man, and have no craving for liquor ceased. Inside of three days after taking the remedy I was free from all desire for liquor. I will be glad to tell any sufferer what I took and how I got cured.

WONDERFUL

It was done in 3 days; if I had only known of it years ago, no wife would have had no power while drinking. Grattle is being found from effect that I decided to write to Dr. Haines, and tell him what I had taken. He answered me, and I take a pride in saying that I have not touched a drop of liquor since. I have also been cured of the awful habit of tobacco. The desire for tobacco left me entirely. I have no craving for it now. I will be glad to answer all letters of inquiry. Dr. Haines' remedy is a godsend to mankind.

Testimonials by the hundreds.

Every one who takes it is cured. Every one who knows of it is glad to tell others of it. Every one who has a friend addicted to drink, tobacco or drugs should write to Dr. Haines and tell him to send a FREE trial treatment of his remedy. Every one who tries it is cured. WHAT! BOSTON PREFERS STEW TO BEANS

Anyway, That's What a Radcliffe Graduate and Big Restaurant Owner Says.

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN.

Miss Bertha Stevenson, Radcliffe graduate and proprietor of several restaurants in Boston and Cambridge, who makes the shocking announcement that Bostonians prefer beef stew to beans.

Do we eat too fast?

Do we gobble our indigestibles?

Do we eat too much?

Do we eat too little?

You can take your choice of answers to all these questions, because eating is a most universal experience, and the all-in-one not only fully theories about how to do it.

But there's a woman in Boston who is an authority on these questions, perhaps a more practical expert than the pure food scientists, and chemical analysis and all the high brow sort.

Miss Bertha Stevenson, a Smithsonian and Radcliffe woman, serves meals by the thousand and thousands people per day.

Ten years ago with $300 capital as a college-bred girl from Iowa college, Miss Stevenson opened her first modest lunch room and bakery out in Cambridge. Next week she opens a fourth great lunch room on Washington street, the second in Boston.

What do Bostonians like most? Miss Stevenson laughed as she answered very promptly.

"Beef stew," of course. I know that I should say beans, and I came to come to a close second. But beef stew is the thing that actually leads the list. I often use 150 pounds of solid beef—that is, net weight with the bones cut out, for stews in a single day."

Miss Stevenson is a sweet, fair haired little woman, with clear, blue eyes, her hair drawn down very neat and prim, and a delightfully laughty Southern drawl to her talk with her help and customers. Here she is, at the head of one of the most successful enterprises of its kind in Boston, and she has come to it by the most unexpected route.

"Are they stupid?" I asked, sweeping my hand past the rows of tables. Miss Stevenson laughed some more, winking her eyes into a characteristic smile.

"I don't go on that principle," she replied, "in fact I am so much interested in what they think that I keep one eye/row wandering around among the counters, listening to the arguments of the 'general public,' making a note of them, and afterward entering them in my record book."

She showed me a big blank book, the pages dated and filled with quoted comments.

"Good menu they have here."

"They're all out of lunch case and it's only half past one!"

"You can always count on their having good coffee here, I've noticed."

So they run, some of them unfavorable, but most of them complimentary.

Study Public's Comments.

"Every morning," Miss Stevenson continued, "the superintendents of the various departments come in and study the book. It has proved very valuable."

"Do you ever get any suggestions from the public?" I asked.

"Yes, but not very often. The public is not very good at suggesting. I have an idea that it would be a good thing to have a dish of pickles on the table, and sometimes I put them on, but I don't find that they are much used. Sometimes I get suggestions as to the quality of food which some customer likes or does not like. There are two walks of life, rich and poor, and I suppose I adapt myself to the former."

Piped of hot water, steam, running water, all conveniences to keep food hot, are of course in the kitchens of the restaurants, and the tables are kept free from soiled dishes and food by waiters and waitresses. The only attempt at style is the printed ticket for the amount of food which each customer has to pay for. There are no fancy waffle irons, fancy sauce and copper chafing dishes in this shop.

War on Johnson-Wells Bout May End Boxing in England

By JACK CONWAY.

Poor matchmaking and greedy promoters are wrecking the boxing game in every part of the world. The general interpretation of the courts decision in the Johnson-Wells match is that boxing is dead in London. It has been established in London that prize fighting is illegal.

The decision means that bouts in the future must be limited to sparring exhibitions of short duration in which there will be neither knockouts or decisions. It is believed that England has witnessed its last championship fight. And all this was caused by poor matchmaking.

When Bombardier Wells was matched to meet Johnson an intense agitation was started in England in order to prevent the bout taking place. This agitation was not on account of it being a boxing match but the fact that Johnson was a negro and Wells a white man, but because of the unevenness of the match.

Johnson is an experienced battler and would have had little difficulty in beating the Britan. If the bout had been permitted to take place it would have been only a matter of time before Wells would have been knocked out.

The English people did not intend to be buffaloed by statements to the effect that Wells was the best boxer and had a good chance of knocking out the colored battler. They were well swallowed such statements before when English champions were matched with American boxers but they had had enough of such things.

The English sporting followers have awakened and don't intend to be the goat any more. For years American boxers have been visiting their shores and taking away good purfsons of bulle. They have had enough.

In Paris things are going from bad to worse. When the fight game was introduced to France on a large scale several years ago the Frenchmen took to the sport like a duck to water. But after they had witnessed several lopsided and fake matches they rebelled.

In New York the greedy promoters are nearly spoiling the fight game as a sport. The Fowler boxing bill offered an excellent change for clean boxing, but the promoters, instead of trying to fight among themselves, each wanted to monopolize the sport and as a result there is grave danger that the Fowler bill will be repealed.

The damage has already been done not on the coast, but so it is down the line.

The good citizens of Sydney, Australia, will pay good money in order to see Sam McVea mix things up with Jim Barry on Saturday. And from where I sit McVey will be most of the mixing up as a well as the "chops" and has some kind of a hunch that he is worthy of championship timber. Lester was considerable prestige in when he defeated Bill Long, the South champion, in far away Australia several weeks ago.

Lester's most sensational victory was over William, who, by the way, had been beaten by an unknown. Both bouts were fixed, Lester went after a match with McVey and was soon satisfied.

McVey is a big husky negro who appears to outclass almost all of the white boys but it is true that he is not in the same class with Jack Johnson. Sam Langford or even Joe Jeanette, but still he is a mighty tough matter and should experience little difficulty in defeating Lester.

Johnny Kilbane of Cleveland and Frankie Conley of Kenosha, should put up a great battle when they meet in the rebuilt Yerkes arena this afternoon. The feather weights are scheduled for twenty rounds of mixing.

Kilbane is one of the cleverest men in the ring and expects to pin Conley's head off. His recent victory over Joe Rivers proved his worth. On the other hand Conley is a fighter pure and simple. He is a man of the Harding Nelson type who is continually rushing at his opponent.

Conley fought a draw battle with Abe Attell and he believes that if he can hold his own with such a clever mitt artist as the Hide defiant that he will not be beaten by Kilbane.

"Young" Saylor of Indianapolis is working hard for his bout with Battling Nelson at the Armory A. A. Tuesday night. Saylor is confident of winning as is shown by an extract of a letter I received from Saylor today. He writes:

"I am in the best of condition and ready to put up the battle of my life. I realize that Nelson will be the hardest man I've met in the ring. But I feel some that I will be the victor."

Nixon was defeated by the Dane on account of his inexperience. He lost his head at certain stages of the fight and attempted to slug Wallops with Nelson.

During my career in the ring I have met the best of them and have usually held my own. On different occasions I have mastered Matty Baldwin of Charlestown, and Young England [illegible] etc. Jack Dillon Matty is one of the best lightweights in the country.

Jack Johnson's declaration that he intends to retire should be taken with a grain of salt. Jack likes the glitter of coin just as well as the rest of us and while he was sore as he is offered the proper inducement he will be found in the ring. Johnson to come to this country. England has some big money while the New York promoters are dealing out the coin. Langford fight would draw a great house in New York. Jack could clean up close to $50,000 as his end of the purse.

FALL RIVER, Mass.—If unable to secure a supply of boxers' records from newsdealers, send twelve cents in money or stamps to F. S. Andrews, Sporting Editor, Evening Wisconsin, Wisconsin. A copy of it copy will be mailed postage prepaid.

M'INNES WILL PLAY IN THE WORLD'S SERIES

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 30.—Reports that John McInnes, the hard-hitting first baseman of the Philadelphia Americans, would not be in the world series because of a broken bone in the wrist of his throwing arm were set at rest yesterday when Dr. Frank H. MacFarland, the club physician, stated that no bones were broken and that McInnes will be all right by next week.

McInnes was struck on the wrist by a pitched ball in a game with Detroit. An X-ray photograph showed that two small fragments had been injured. A rest of a week will make McInnes as good as ever.

BALDWIN AND BURNS DRAW

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 30.—Matty Baldwin of Boston and Frankie Burns fought twenty rounds to a draw here last evening. The bout was one of the fastest ever witnessed in this section, and a large crowd turned out to see the battle.

Baldwin forced the fighting all the way, and the decision of Referee Toby Irwin was received with displeasure by the crowd, when thought Baldwin had won. Burns was forced to hang on time and time again as a result of Baldwin's wicked body blows. His footwork was all that saved him.

JIM KENDRICK AND WAGNER IN TAME BOUT

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Boxing with a careful consideration that amounted to almost professional courtesy, Jim Kendrick, an English featherweight, and "Young" Wagner, the local Italian lightweight, engaged in a ten-round sparring exhibition at the Twentieth Century Athletic Club last night. It was the consensus of opinion that the spectators got the worst of it. It would be an injustice to either man to declare a winner, for neither was ever in danger.

Kendrick accepted the engagement in place of Frankie Burns, who sprained his ankle while in training.

In the semi-final six rounds, Jack Fleischer, a New York outpointed Teddy Murphy of Boston in a fast bout.

MATT WELLS WILL NOT FIGHT WELSH

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—Matt Wells, former champion of England, has been matched to fight Billy Donovan in a six-round bout at the Stadium in Pittsburg, Monday, October 9. The men will meet at 125 pounds. George McDonald, manager of Wells, said he would not entertain another match for Wells in America with Freddie Welsh, but says his interests in match Wells with Packey McFarland and Ad Wolgast.

CLABBY GETS DRAW WITH MIKE GIBBONS

WINNIPEG, Man., Sept. 30.—Mike Gibbons of St. Paul got a draw with Jimmy Clabby of Milwaukee, claimant of the world's welterweight championship, in a 15-round bout here last night.

Several Important School Games Scheduled for To-day

Sixteen scholastic gridiron battles are down on the schedule for this afternoon, and many of these games will mark the opening games for many schools. The candidates have been hard at work and all of the elevens that battle to-day are prepared. The Boston high school teams will play their first games of the season this afternoon.

The Dorchester High-Medford High game on the Dunbar avenue grounds should prove to be a good attraction and quite a little interest is being manifested as to the outcome. Dorchester has a strong team this season and they are confident that they will inaugurate its season successfully. Teacher Coach Fichet has the team rounded into good football trim and he expects them to make a fine showing.

Medford High is represented by some team this season. They opened their season last Thursday with a scoreless game against the Boston College team and all hands made a good showing. Lawless, Day, Grant and Brogan form a good backfield and they are bound to give their opponents much trouble.

Waltham High will play its fourth game of the season this afternoon on its home grounds, having the Providence Technical team as its opponents. The Watch City boys opened last season with this team and run up a score of 56 to 0, but the Rhode Island boys predict a different story this afternoon.

The followers of the school gridiron games will wait for the return of the Mechanic Arts-Natick High game at Natick. This will be the opening game for the Boston team, but the playing ability of the Natick team is already known. Natick has a fast team on the field and they will give all comers a hard run for high honors. Last Saturday they proved a hard proposition for the Waltham team and only weight beat them. Coach Fray has the team rounding in midseason form and he will present the same line-up this afternoon that battled Waltham. Captain Hyland of Mechanic Arts will be out of the game, having sustained an injury to his shoulder a few days ago.

The strong Cambridge Latin team will get its second game of the year when it lines up against the veteran Arlington High team this afternoon at Arlington. The Cantabs will outweigh the Arlington team and while this will be a good game for the home boys are fast and likely to put up a stubborn battle.

The strong Boston Latin will pile up the scores against Everett High. The Boston team is heavy and fast but the game of the Everett team is not known. Everett High should win its game against Boston Latin on its home grounds this afternoon as the Revere team will be without the services of three of its regular players. Everett has a strong team and they will pile up a large score on the visitors. The Technical will play Haverhill High at Haverhill and a good game is anticipated. Chester Academy will play its initial game this afternoon, at Chester, taking on Exeter, and several other games that should develop into hard battles are on the schedule.

BROOKLINE HIGH WINS FROM ROXBURY LATIN

Brookline High played its first football game of the season at Griggs Field, Brookline, easily defeating the Roxbury Latin School, 11 to 0.

The first touchdown was made by Fullback Waltzer, and the second by Quarterback Mason. The goal was kicked by Captain Hedersoni.

Despite the rain, a crowd of 300 rooters was on hand.

THE STADIUM, Sept. 30.—Harvard opened the football season in the Stadium this afternoon with the Bates team from Lewiston, Me., the first victim of the Crimson fury. Most ideal weather conditions could hardly have been ordered for the first clash of the year in the classic structure, the air being cool and the field dry, but having dried sufficiently over night to insure a good footing for the backs.

The heavy Harvard rush line went into the game expecting to tear the lighter Bates team into shreds, despite the fact that the Crimson attack is practically a new one, with the exception of Captain Fisher at guard and the two ends, and has not had the advantage of work in a game, such as was the case with the Maine line, which is practically veteran.

Harvard's line averaged about 185 pounds to the man, fifteen pounds heavier than its opponents. Bates's one desire to-day, as in past years, was to keep the Harvard total down to what might be termed a respectable score, and possibly by some hook or crook slip in a score on the big beans.

Open Game by Harvard.

Harvard went into the struggle ready to give a good demonstration of the open game, in which Coach Haughton has been instructing his charges since the beginning of the season, and revert to the old style only in spots, whenever the goal was so near that a line plunge would be certain of the required distance. Bates, on the other hand, not having the weight, resorted to a number of trick plays to gain the necessary distance and a first down.

Harvard's team to-day was more or less of an experiment in some respects, this being true of the left side of the line, where two new men, Keays and Jenkes were playing at guard and tackle respectively. Those men have yet to show their metal and others are pushing them hard. The right side of the Harvard line was the strongest, with Captain Fisher at guard and Gardiner at tackle.

Backfield Proves Strong.

The backfield was the strongest which Harvard could put into the fray at this time of the year, several of the lighter and faster backs not having rounded into such shape at this time to be up to their best game, which they will show later on. T. H. Frothingham at right half was more or less of an experiment.

HANOVER, N. H., Sept. 30.—Dartmouth is ready for the clash this afternoon with Massachusetts State, and Coach Cavanaugh thinks he has a much better regulated machine than the one that represented the Green Wednesday. Following so closely upon the ruthless shake-up in setting positions on the varsity after the poor exhibition against Norwich last Wednesday, the line-up for to-day's game is entirely problematical. Even Coach Cavanaugh said this morning that he was not certain who would be in at the whistle. All the while the coaches have spent their time chiefly on strengthening the defense, and to-day's game should show evident improvement in their protective ability. Coach Cavanaugh's statement of the line-up to-day:

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 30.—Yale and Holy Cross found a wet and heavy field for their annual gridiron clash this afternoon, and Head Coach Field said this morning that many substitutions would be used on the Yale team. The slippery grounds was expected to keep the score low. This is the second game of the season for both sorrels and Holy Cross was expected to furnish a stiffer competition than in several seasons.

MISS HOTCHKISS IN CLEAN SWEEP

Miss Hazel Hotchkiss, the national women's tennis champion, hailing from California, walked away with two final honors at the Longwood Cricket Club at Brookline this morning, defeating Miss Edith Rotch of Boston, 6—1, 6—0, in the final of women's singles. Paired with Miss Eleonora Sears, they won the women's doubles, beating Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Miss Edith Rotch, 6—2, 6—0.

In the singles event Miss Hotchkiss did not have to extend herself to any great degree, winning easily. In the doubles Miss Sears played the star, playing fine tennis and serving in splendid style, scoring three services aces in one game and playing an all-round good contest. Miss Hotchkiss was apparently saving herself for the mixed doubles final, which was played this afternoon between herself with E. H. Whitney and Mrs. Barger-Wallach and H. C. Johnson.

FOOTBALL IS SAVED AT SOMERVILLE HIGH

Somerville High's athletic field controversy has been settled. After a conference with the finance committee of the Board of Aldermen and officials of the High School Association, Mayor Charles A. Burns, in view of the arrangements made with the athletic committee from other cities and the necessity of supporting the High School athletics, yesterday decided to announce the free field on the Somerville branch of the Myrtle [illegible] to allow the High School Athletic Association to charge admission, as usual, for this year at least.

BIG FIELD DAY FOR BALL PLAYERS

CHICAGO, Sept. 30.—Players from both major leagues compete to-night in the customary field day at the White Sox ball park, and a record or two is bound to result from the class of the entrants. Nine events on the schedule, including five 100-yard dashes and ten 1-mile hitting, batting and average handicap, and a 1-mile and half-mile race for members of the Boosting Ball Sox are entered. Wilbur Goodwin, the pitcher, now with the Cubs, is among the contestants.

TWO LOCAL RACE EVENTS CALLED OFF

Two automobile racing matinees, between Quannapowitt and Wakefield Reading at Reading and Fenway and Haverhill at Haverhill, scheduled for this afternoon, have been postponed on account of the condition of the tracks. The Reading program will be run to-morrow afternoon.

TY COBB AND MURPHY FINED

CINCINNATI, Sept. 30.—Because of the uncertainty of the race for the pennant in the National League the National Commission, after a long session here yesterday, decided not to adopt a schedule for the world's series. It had been the intention of the commission before going into session to draw up two schedules, one for a series between the Giants and the Athletics and another for a world's series between the Cubs and the Athletics, but instead the baseball fathers decided to await until next Thursday before anything is done for the big event.

The commission will probably meet then in New York, for by that time the race in the National League will be settled.

The place for the opening of the world's series will be drawn by lot, Chairman Hermann declared. The commission, however, adopted a few rules for the big series. It is intended to play a game in each city each day in case the Giants and the Athletics meet in the world's series, but if the Cubs win the National League pennant other arrangements will have to be made.

The immortal Ty Cobb was fined $100 to pay a like sum to the commission for participating in a Sunday semi-professional game that [illegible] in New York. President Charles Murphy of the Cubs was fined $50 as a result of a deal with the Savannah, Ga., club for Player Miller.

WORK ON NEW RED SOX BALL PARK STARTED

As a first move in the changes in the Boston American League baseball circuit matters, papers were passed yesterday transferring the Fenway park grounds on Ipswich and Landsdowne streets, by Charles H. Taylor of Boston, Austin, L. Carr of Melrose and Arthur C. Wise of Hingham, as trustees, to develop the property, build a baseball pavilion, grade and regrade grade and improve the grounds, so that the capacity and character the accommodations will be second to none in this country.

The Giants, whose failure so far to slip the Cubs the coup de grace has made time but a trifle more than even, went into the game with the avowed purpose to wallop the wavering champions.

DAN MURPHY IS SOME FIELDER

To-day's article is the sixteenth published in the Daily AMERICAN, dealing with the players who sang [illegible] the world's series, by R. W. [illegible]. One will appear each day.

By R. W. LARONG

So one can say that the Philadelphia Athletics are weak in right field. That position is covered by Dan Murphy, one of the most capable as well as most popular ball players in the land.

If the Cubs were playing the Athletics again there would be little to choose between the rival right fielders, but Murphy has something on Jack Murray, McGraw's regular, despite the latter's greatness as a slugging outfielder.

Murphy's batting was one of the features of the series of 1910. He had the honor of batting .500, the biggest batting of the entire set, his honor off Harry McIntire in Chicago clearing the rail in front of the seats in faraway right.

Murphy started out with a second baseman, but Connie Mack switched him when he found that Eddie Collins was going to be that job.

Dan was born in Philadelphia in Centennial year. His family soon afterward moved to Nebraska, and there Murphy received his early schooling. His baseball career began in Omaha, when the New York giants trained there. Murphy went with the North Dakota club, but the fire that played several times for Norwich. He was picked by the New York club in 1903, but failed to make good and was returned to Norwich. Connie Mack grabbed him in July of 1907 and he has been an Athletic regular ever since.

Murphy is five feet nine inches tall and weighs about 176. He throws and bats right-handed.

He is one of the "cleanup kids" in the Mack batting order and is likely to make trouble for the New York pitchers in the coming series.

The championship series starting this afternoon will be the last of the season. It will be between Johnny Shanks's Startish Giants and Peggy Mullens's Wasps. There is hardly any use of it taking place already have second place cinched in the championship column, the only one which should happen this or that team would have so much or not so much or just enough or not enough or a little more or too much less.

There is not a doubt in the world that we could fill three pages; we would if we were getting paid by the page, full of such dope, but we will not. All we can say is let the best team win and the worst team lose, and then add that it makes no difference either way.

Shrimp Flynn, whose team, the Wild Cats, is at the bottom of the championship column, is cocksure of winning the pennant. To do that he has to win two games and then three championship games and he has the rag cinched.

According to Shrimp he can do it. He wants to bet anybody in town ten marbles to one that he can. We would take him up but we are afraid of risking even one marble against a fellow like Shrimp. It is too tricky for us. More news in tomorrow's paper.

WHY!---A New Love Serial---By Elinor Glyn

perhaps more Norman than Saxon, for his hair was dark, though his eyes were blue, and the marks of breeding in the creature showed as plainly as in a Derby winner.

Francis Markrute always smoked his cigars to the end if he were at leisure, and the weed had come to be a good one, but Lord Tancred (Tristram Corrimer Goddard, twenty-fourth Baron Tancred, of Wraylth in the County of Suffolk) flung his into the grate after a few whiffs, and he laughed with a slightly whimsical bitterness as he went on with the conversation.

"You, Francis, my friend, the stone here is played out. I am thirty, and there is nothing interesting left for me to do but emigrate to Canada for a wife at least, and take up a ranch."

"Wraylth unentangled heavily, I suppose?" asked Mr. Markrute, quietly.

"Pretty well; and the Northern property, too. When my mother's pittance is paid, there is not a great deal for this year. It seems, I don't mind much. I had a pretty fair time before these lecherly Radicals made things so difficult."

The financier nodded, and the young man went on: "My fortunes are out of what they could have been, but not a great deal of really money to come into, and one has to live."

Francis Markrute assented for a minute thoughtfully.

"Naturally," he said at last, "only the question is for how long—I understand a plunge if you settle in disgust—it is the drifting and trusting to chance, and a gradual sinking, which come to not a poor game. Did you ever read Dr. Musset's 'Rolla'?"

"The fellow who had arrived at his last night, and to whom the little girl was so kind? Yes. Well?"

"You reminded me of Jacques Rolla—that is all."

"Oh, come, it is not as bad as that!" Lord Tancred exclaimed, and he laughed. "I can collect a few thousands still, even here, and I can go to Canada. I believe there are many kinds of money to make there, with a little capital, if it is a nice, sporting life. I just looked in this afternoon, on my way back from Scotland, to tell you I should be going out to prospect about the end of November, and could not join you for the pheasants on the 20th, as you were good enough to ask me to do."

The financier half closed his eyes. When he did this there was always something of importance working in his brain.

"You have not any glaring vices, Tancred," he said. "You are no gambler, either on the turf or at cards. You are not over addicted to expensive ladies. You are cultivated—for a sportsman—and you have made one or two decent speeches in the House of Lords. You are, in fact, rather a fine specimen of your class. It seems a pity you should have to shut down and go to the colonies."

"Oh, I don't know! And I have not altogether got to shut down," the young man said, "only the show is growing rather rotten over here. We have let the rabble, the most unfit and ignorant, have the casting vote, and the machine now will crush any man. I have kept out of politics as much as I can, and I am glad of it."

Francis Markrute got up and lowered the blind a few inches. A miserable September sun was trying to shine into the room. If Lord Tancred had not been so preoccupied with his own thoughts he would have remarked this unaccustomed action on the part of his host. He was no fool. But his mind was far away. It almost startled him when the cold, deliberate voice continued:

"I have a proposition to make to you—should you care to accept it. I have a niece, a widow. She is rather an attractive lady. If you will marry her I will pay off all your mortgages and settle on her quite a princely income for life."

"Good Lord!" said Lord Tancred.

The financier reddened a little about the temples and his eyes for an instant gave forth a flash of steel. There had been an infinite variety of meanings hidden in the exclamation, but he demanded quietly:

"What point of the question causes you to exclaim 'Good Lord'?"

The sunfreak of Lord Tancred never deserted him.

"The whole thing," he said; "to marry at all to begin with, and to marry an unknown woman, to have one's debts paid for the rest—it is a tall order."

"A most common occurrence. Think of the number of your peers who have gone to America for their wives, for no other reason."

"And think of the rotters they are, most of them!—and think of the children they have! I mayn't be much catch financially, but I have one of the oldest names and titles in England—and up to now it has not had any ends or cowards in the family. Excuse me, Francis, what are you driving at? Confound it, man, I have had nothing and can work if it should ever come to that."

Mr. Markrute smoothed his hands. He was a peculiarly still person generally.

"Yes, it was a blunder, I admit, to put it this way. So I will be frank with you. Mr. Gerald is also, my friend, as said as yours. My niece is still I know, in the market. I would like to see her married to an Englishman—I would like to see her married to you of all Englishmen—because I like you, and you have qualities about you which count in life. Oh, believe me—" he added in a protesting finger to quell an interruption—"I have studied you these years; there is nothing you can say for yourself, or your affairs, that I do not know."

Lord Tancred laughed.

"My dear old boy," he said, "we have been friends for a long time, and now you are coming to home truths I must say I. Pile your decked cold-blooded point of view on every subject. I like your knowledge of wines and cigars and pictures, and you are a most entertaining companion. But push my soul I would not like to have your niece for a wife if she took after you!"

"You think she would be cold-blooded, too?"

"Undoubtedly; but it is all perfectly preposterous. I don't believe you mean a word you are saying; it is some kind of a joke."

"Have you ever known me to make such jokes, Tancred?" Mr. Markrute asked, calmly.

"No, I haven't; and that is the odd part of it. What the devil do you mean, really, Francis?"

"I mean what I say. I will pay every debt you have, and give you a charming wife with a fortune."

Lord Tancred put his hand walked about the room. He was a perfectly natural creature, stood and calm as those of his race; disciplined and deliberate in moments of temper or difficulty, he rarely never lived under self-conscious control, as the financier did; he was rather moved now and so he walked about. He was with a friend, and it was not the moment to have to bother over disguising his feelings.

"Oh, it is impossible, Francis. I could not do it. I have talked about the world as you know, and there you are aware of everything about me, you say, you have probably heard some of my failings, my disfailings. I never go after a woman unless she attracts, and I would never marry one of them unless I were madly in love with her, whether she had money or no, though I believe I would hate a wife with money in no case. Should be saying like the American lady of poor Darrow-

"I mean what I say. I will pay every debt you have, and give you a charming wife with a fortune."

wood. 'It's my motor and you can't have it to-day.'"

"You would marry a woman, then, if you were in love?" Francis Markrute asked, "in spite of everything."

"Probably. But I have never been really in love. Have you? It is all story book stuff, that almighty passion. I expect. They none of them matter very much after a while, do they, old boy?"

"I have understood it is possible for a woman to matter," the financier said, and he drew in his lips.

"Well, up to now I have not," Lord Tancred announced, "and may the day be far off when one does. I feel pretty safe."

A strange, mysterious smile crept over Mr. Markrute's face.

"Be the way, also—how do you know the lady would be willing to marry me, Francis? You spoke as if I only had to be considered in the affair."

"So you have. I can answer for my niece. She will do as I wish; and, as I said before, you are rather a perfect picture of an English nobleman, Tancred. You have not found women recalcitrant, as a rule, no?"

Lord Tancred was not inordinately vain —thought a man—and he had a sense of humor, so he laughed.

"You my word, it is amusing, your turning into a sort of matrimonial agent. Can't you see the fun of the thing yourself?"

"It seems quite natural to me—you have every social advantage to offer a woman, and a presentable person, and my niece has youth, and some looks, and a large fortune. But we will say no more about it. I shall be glad to be of any service I can to you anyway, in regard to your Canadian scheme. Come and dine to-night. I happen to have asked a couple of railway magnates with interests out there, and you can get some information from them."

And so it was arranged, and Lord Tancred got up to go, but just at the door he paused and said with a laugh:

"And what I see the niece?"

The financier had his back turned, and so he permitted the flicker of a smile to come over his mouth as he answered:

"It might be—but we have dismissed the subject of the niece."

And so they parted.

At the sound of the closing of the door Mr. Markrute pressed the button of a wonderful trifle of Russian enamel and emerald, which lay on his writing table, and a quiet servant entered the room.

"Tell the Countess Shuiski I wish to speak to her immediately, please," he said. "Ask her to step in at once."

But he had to walk up and down the room several times and was growing impatient before the door opened and a woman came slowly into the room.

CHAPTER II.

THE financier paused in his restless walk as he heard the door open and stood perfectly still, with his back to the light. The woman advanced to the middle of the room and also stood still, and they looked at each other, with no great lore in their eyes—though she who had entered was well worth looking at, from a number of points of view. Firstly, she had that arresting, compelling personality which does not depend upon feature, or coloring, or form, or beauty. A subtle force of character, a radiating magnetism breathed from her whole being. When Zara Shuiski came into any assemblage of people conversation stopped and speculation began.

She was rather tall and very slender—and yet in every voluptuous curve of her lithe body she refuted the idea of thinness. Her head was small, and her face small and short and oval, with no wonderfully cut-out features—only the skin was something quite exceptional in its white purity—not the purity of milk, but the purity of rich cream velvet or a garden's petals; her mouth was particularly curved and red, and her teeth were very even, and when she smiled—which was rarely—they suggested something of great strength, though they were small and white. And now I am coming to her two wonders—her eyes and her hair. At first you could have sworn the eyes were black, just great pools of ink—or discs of black velvet set in their broad lids, and shaded with jet lashes—but if they chanced to glance up in the full light, then you knew they were slate-color—not a tinge of brown or green—the whole iris a uniform shade. Strange, slumbrous, resentful eyes, under straight, thick black brows, the expression full of all sorts of meanings, though none of them peaceful or calm. And from some far back Spanish Jewish ancestress she probably got that glorious head of red hair—the color of a ripe chestnut when it falls from its shell, or a beautifully groomed bright bay horse. The heavy plaits, which were wound tightly round her head, must have fallen below her knees when they were undone. Her coiffure gave you the impression that she never thought of fashion, or changed its form of dressing from year to year. And the exquisite planting of the hair on her forehead, as it waved back in broad waves, added to the perfection of the Greek simplicity of the whole thing. Nothing about her had been added by ourselves art; her dress, of some black, clinging stuff, was rather poor, though she wore it with the air of a traditional empress; indeed she looked as empress from the tips of her perfect fingers to her small arched feet.

And it was with imperial hauteur that she asked, in a low, cultivated voice, with no accent:

"Well, what is it? Why have you sent for me this peremptorily?"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A PASSING ATTRACTION

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen and have met a young man three years my senior. I have invited him to call at my home, but said that two weeks should elapse. He did not answer, and I am wondering if it was because I did not state what day he should call.

The two weeks have elapsed and I have received no response nor have I seen him. Shall I write him again?

A READER.

YOU must know, my dear girl, that if a man wishes to continue his acquaintance, he will find some means of doing so and will take the first step.

Men often are attracted to a girl at a party and say a great deal more than they mean seriously.

This man probably did intend to come to see you, but circumstances and his work have put it out of his mind.

Don't think too seriously about him, for there are lots of other people, perhaps more worthy of you, on whom to bestow your friendship.

HAVE PATIENCE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been going with a young man for about eight months. He has no bad habits and is considered a nice young man by all who know him. He is twenty-two and I am nineteen. He talks very seriously about our future, and by his actions and words I know he loves me. I love him with all my heart, and he has asked me if I really do and has received his answer every time, and yet at times he tells me I don't care for him and that I only make fun of him in his absence, which I do not. I tell him he is wrong, but he keeps telling me repeatedly that I am not in earnest. Could you tell me what to do? I can tell he loves me, and yet he thinks I am only fooling.

BROWN EYES

THIS is perhaps one of the very signs that proves his sincere love for you. Very often the thought of losing the person loved, the terror of desertion, is one of the many symptoms which love manifests. The stronger the love, the greater the anxieties and doubts.

This then explains his behavior. As to what you should do, only time can help you to win his confidence and convince him of your sincere love.

Save Our Women From Wage Slavery

As old Faneuil Hall rocked half a century ago, when Massachusetts orators fought for the breaking of the chains that bound black men and black women in the throes of slavery, so this historic structure will sway this evening when men and women, inspired by patriotic love of home and country, demand that women slavery in iron foundries and other such places be ended in this country.

These women must be saved—saved, even against themselves! Every day that a mother works in such a place as the Blake & Knowles pump works of East Cambridge have been described, and were shown to be, when they were exposed in last Sunday's AMERICAN, she imperils the future of this country.

Men and women of Massachusetts—and especially you who have known some of the horrors of the old countries—go to Faneuil Hall this evening and protest against blotting America with this women slavery disgrace from a foreign land!

The woman in charge of the department where women toil in the East Cambridge pump works says that there are other places in this State where women work under worse conditions.

If this is true, then the exposure of the pump works conditions came none too quickly.

Women slavery must be stopped.

It is an outrege against womanhood and an insult to the memory of the brave men and the brave women who suffered privation and death as pioneers in building up a country that should be forever free from such conditions.

Go to Faneuil Hall this evening in the interest of your mother, your sister and your home!

SAVE THE WOMEN OF AMERICA FROM WAGE SLAVERY!

What Gladstone Thought of Parnell.

The Story Will Be Told in To-morrow's Sunday AMERICAN.

THE memory of Charles Stewart Parnell, one of the greatest political figures of the nineteenth century, is to be honored to-morrow in the capital city of Ireland. The occasion—the unveiling of the St. Gaudens statue of Parnell, which a grateful people have caused to be erected to preserve the fame of the man who served them so well, is expected to produce one of the mightiest demonstrations seen upon Irish soil since the stirring days of Daniel O'Connell.

Redmond is to deliver the oration, and far beyond the confines of his great audience, his words of tribute to his chief are awaited with surpassing interest.

In the brief space of Parnell's career, his greatest antagonist at first, as he was his greatest ally afterwards, was William Ewart Gladstone. Some years after Parnell's death, Mr. Gladstone was asked by a friend of both men, what he thought of the Irish leader. Gladstone answered the question in some very remarkable sentences. These will be found to-morrow in the Sunday AMERICAN, in an article on Parnell, written by Mr. C. O'Connell Galvin, which no friend of Ireland and her great and winning cause can afford not to read.

Another feature of to-morrow's Great Sunday AMERICAN will be a splendid defence of his race from a time-worn calumny by John E. Redmond, M. M., leader to-day of the Irish forces in the House of Commons. In this article Mr. Redmond hurls such a battery of history and logic that "not a stone is left upon a st[one] on the cit[y] of Ireland's enemies. Read it, every word, [in] to-morrow's AMERICAN.

The Young Turk

The So-Called Young Turk Presents Himself as the Apostle and Representative of Civilization. He Is in Reality a Type of the Oriental Ruler—A Pest That Should Be Driven Out of Europe

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Examiner.

Year after year Gladstone denounced "the unspeakable Turk." He tried to arouse the conscience of Europe, to avenge and stop the massacres of the Armenians—but without success.

Gladstone is dead, and the particular line of unspeakable Turks whom he fought have passed from the seat of power in Turkey.

There is a new government, a new Sultan, a new party. And the so-called "Young Turk" assures the world that civilization reigns in Turkey, that barbarism passed away with the old exiled Sultan, and that Turkey now takes her place in the congress of civilization.

But, Old Turk or Young Turk, old system or new system, Turkey is still Turkey, and the shameful massacres continue.

The latest victims are the Albanians. The descriptions of the atrocities inflicted upon these miserable people are too frightful for conception or for repetition.

Bands of Turkish soldiers were sent into the mountain regions, where the half-starved Albanians live, and every man, woman and child was put to death—the massacres are accompanied by scenes that are worse than murder.

The Turks, savage and merciless, declare that they are keeping order within their own dominion: that they are attending to their own affairs in their own house. And civilization—such as it is—accepts this explanation, and allows the massacres to continue.

It is as though in a civilized city a man within his four walls were murdering women and children, and condescended no other explanation than that he was working within his own house and within his own rights.

Why is the duty of the civilized nations as a whole any less than would be the duty of civilized citizens in the case of a man murdering within his own house?

A vigorous protest from the united nations, or any two or three of them, would put an end to the murders. For the Turks know their weakness; they know that they are deliberate murderers, killing human beings because of the delight that they find in the destruction of "infidels." A very slight effort on the part of civilization would stop the massacres.

But the effort is not made.

Occasionally some public official, speaking on his own account: some newspaper, or, as in a recent instance, the head of the Catholic Church, denounces the Turkish atrocities.

Then the Turk—the Young Turk, more vigorous and as murderous as the old—replies that he is "punishing brigandage."

His explanation is that the Albanians live in the hills, that they swoop down upon the peaceful Turks on the plains, rob them and murder them.

It is a fact that among the Albanians, as among all peoples in that half-civilized, half-starved section of Europe, brigandage exists more or less.

But it is not because of brigandage that the Albanians are massacred. They are hunted like wild beasts; the women and even the youngest children are killed BECAUSE THEY ARE CHRISTIANS AND BECAUSE THE MOHAMMEDAN BELIEVES THAT IT IS A WORTHY ACT TO KILL AN INFIDEL, AN ACT THAT WILL INSURE HIM A PARTICULARLY COMFORTABLE DIVAN IN THE DISREPUTABLE MOHAMMEDAN HEAVEN.

It is a fact that the Turkish soldiers sent into the Albanian hills to hunt and murder the defenceless mountaineers enter upon the chase with zest and fanatic enthusiasm. They have been taught by the interpreters of their prophet that God looks with pleasure upon the massacre of any man, woman or child not a Mohammedan, and that God rewards the murderer richly and in proportion to the number of his murders.

This condition ought to interest the so-called "Christian countries." There should be enough decency in national government to make it impossible for the outrages to continue. The duty of educated, civilized men lies beyond national boundary and, strictly interpreted, national jurisdiction.

Nations have united in exterminating the slave trade. Surely the nations, and especially England, that did so much to fight the slave trade, might take an interest in exterminating the trade of murder carried on by Turkey.

There need be no religious discussion in a matter which involves simply the suppression of wilful massacre.

Those unfortunate Albanians are murdered because they are Christians, because the Turk believes that he fulfills a sacred duty when he kills an infidel.

Certainly the nations that call themselves Christian, that profess regard for the teachings of Christianity, should save these wretched people.

Incidentally the condition of things in Turkey, the constant murders of Armenians, Albanians and others, demonstrate the unfitness of the Turks, and of other Oriental races, to govern themselves or others.

The conditions in Turkey should teach a lesson to the sentimentalists that are demanding freedom for other bodies of Asiatics now fortunately in the control of civilized government.

Those that see the Turks murdering children, butchering women, because they happen to be Christians, should learn a lesson concerning the degenerate, dead, ossified soul of the East.

It is sickening to see sentimentalists who realize what this Oriental spirit of barbarism, murder and oppression means actually trying to restore power to the Asiatics that even now must be prevented by the police, from marrying girls under ten years of age and from burning alive widows upon the death of their husbands.

The Turks should be stopped in their career of murder. Armenians, Albanians and others, victims of Musulman ferocity, should be protected by threats against Turkey, if threats suffice, and by prompt action, if threats prove futile.

And if this cannot be done, the power of Turkey should be driven from Europe. Constantinople should become a civilized city, surrounded by civilized regions and inhabited by civilized human beings. And the Turks should be made to change or be driven back to Asia, whence they came.

And, above all, there should be no sentimental slush poured out concerning the wrongs of Asiatics, the wrongs of Egyptians, under European rule.

Only a maudlin sentimental idiot would advocate giving back power to the Rajahs, who starved and murdered their people, or to the equally vile rulers that in past years degraded the once glorious Valley of the Nile.
